How is IMB/BCM useful for researchers, teachers, students?

The International Medieval Bibliography (IMB) and Bibliographie de civilisation médiévale (BCM) are the leading international reference tools for medieval studies, trusted by scholars for decades. Together, they provide detailed bibliographic information on books, journal articles, essays, and book chapters published from 1967 to the present day.

IMB and BCM enable you to quickly and easily discover what has been written on specific authors, texts, subjects, places, and historical periods. They are particularly valuable for medievalists seeking to deepen their understanding of the Middle Ages, identify gaps in the literature, or refine the scope of ongoing research projects.

What makes IMB and BCM unique is their comprehensive coverage of all aspects of medieval civilization—from history, literature, and linguistics to art, archaeology, theology, and philosophy. They also include specialized content on medieval Latin culture and intellectual life, making them indispensable for research in cultural and social history. Their international scope ensures access to scholarship published in multiple languages and from diverse academic traditions.

Reflections on IMB

“Whenever one contemplates starting some scholarly work on a medieval topic, it is sensible to find out what has already been written about that topic over the last decades. I always start by searching the International Medieval Bibliography. It is simply the best international bibliography on the Middle Ages, and, irrespective of discipline, topic, area, or era, it never fails to come up with helpful references to literature. Of course, you never find all the references you need in the IMB—but then, you would not find all of them in other bibliographies either. And there is more: the references you do find in the IMB may help you set up lines of enquiry you had not thought of before. The time spent consulting this online bibliography is time well spent, as the IMB really can help your research along.”

Professor Marco Mostert, Utrecht University

“The IMB was one of the first bibliographical research tools I used as a graduate student at the University of Toronto in the 1980s. Then in book form, it instantly became an indispensable tool for all my graduate research. With its digitisation in the 1990s, the IMB turned into an even more valuable resource with its extensive and comprehensive searches. Indeed, whenever I begin a new project, I begin it with an IMB search. As a graduate supervisor for more than 30 years at the University of Bristol and now at the University of Calgary, I have recommended the same approach to dozens of PhD and MA students. May the IMB long continue to support emerging and established scholars on their journey to (re)discover the past.”

Professor Carolyn Muessig, University of Calgary

“The IMB has been a fixture in the lives of many medievalists since the days when it was a printed book. Now, on the internet, it is an even more useful and easy-to-use resource. The study of the Middle Ages covers a wide chronology and geography, and is inherently interdisciplinary, with most scholars needing to keep up with developments in several adjacent disciplines. The IMB is the only bibliographical resource that meets this need, enabling all medievalists to track down the research most relevant to their work from across a wide range of publications.”

Professor Judith Jesch, University of Nottingham

Perspecti will be a database capturing the unique publication fingerprint of research in the humanities, to offer reliable perspectives for researchers, librarians, institutions, governments, and funders. It aims to support the humanities and foster its bibliodiversity.
